The Doris Duke Charitable Foundation Announces Appointment of Andrew Bowman to Program Director for the Environment

New York – The Doris Duke Charitable Foundation today announced that Andrew Bowman has been appointed Program Director for the Environment. Mr. Bowman has been a member of the foundation’s Environment Program team for the last five years.

“We are very pleased that Andrew will be leading the Environment Program as we begin a new decade,” said Ed Henry, president of the foundation. “He brings a wealth of experience related to wildlife conservation and climate change and is well suited to respond to evolving needs and opportunities within the environmental field.”

Mr. Bowman joined the foundation in January 2005 after moving from Portland, Oregon, where he practiced law in various capacities, including for the nonprofit Defenders of Wildlife and at the law firm Perkins Coie. Upon arriving at the foundation, he served as Program Officer for the Environment and helped administer program activities related to wildlife habitat conservation. Since early 2007, he has been the Director of the foundation’s Climate Change Initiative – a five-year grants program that seeks to help build a clean-energy economy. To date, Mr. Bowman has overseen more than $37 million in grants to inform government policies that can foster technological innovation in the energy sector and accelerate the emergence of tomorrow’s clean-energy technologies.

In 1995, Mr. Bowman earned a master's degree in City and Regional Planning from the University of California at Berkeley as well as a J.D. from the University of California, Hastings College of the Law, in San Francisco. In 2003, he also received an LL.M. in Environmental and Natural Resources Law from the Northwestern School of Law of Lewis & Clark College in Portland, Oregon. His undergraduate education was at the University of California at Berkeley, where he was a Truman Scholar.

Mr. Bowman recently joined the board of the Eastern Environmental Law Center and serves on the steering committee for the Climate and Energy Funders Group of the Consultative Group on Biological Diversity. He remains an active member of the Oregon State Bar.

As Program Director for the Environment at the Doris Duke Charitable Foundation, Mr. Bowman will be responsible for leading all environmental grant-making activities of the foundation. As part of its portfolio, the Environment Program will continue to support strategic wildlife habitat conservation. Grants in this area will be designed to provide permanent protection of important wildlife habitat and to address emerging threats to wildlife such as the anticipated severity of climate change and widespread energy development on the landscape. Among other areas of grant-making, the Environment Program will continue the foundation's work related to climate change mitigation by making grants to increase energy efficiency in the buildings sector, and it will undertake new grant-making initiatives to respond to environmental challenges in urban areas. The foundation plans to release revised grant-making guidelines for the Environment Program by the summer of 2010.

The mission of the Doris Duke Charitable Foundation (www.ddcf.org) is to improve the quality of people's lives through grants supporting the performing arts, environmental conservation, medical research and the prevention of child abuse, and through preservation of the cultural and environmental legacy of Doris Duke's properties. The foundation's assets currently total approximately $1.5 billion, and it has awarded approximately $927 million in grants since 1997.
